It's a bit hard to properly review it (and even worse recommending or not.) as I don't really know how/what I felt so maybe I should just state the facts and while doing that come to some form of a conclusion: Windowed only (not sure what res. 900 times something maybe.) KBD controls only - apart from start menu. Your hitbox is also a square/block wide so enemies will hit you before they're actually hitting you. You move in squares/boxes so you can't change direction before the previous has finished which - if you're unused to that kind of control scheme i.e. aren't stuck in 1990 - can be a bit hard to get used to and will make you fall off ledges as you didn't press up before you were at the ladder. (if you ever played Quake - RQ=Real Quake; pre-QW, with a 250 ping you can sort of understand the way you have to think.) "Music" I did like, reminds me a bit of the ambient style of the original Fallout/s, so it's more of a sound mat than music but I do like that in games and when reading a book. (it's just present and non-intrusive) So far there's been no way to fight the enemies (bats and some bug/beetle I guess) - there's also some flying "Unmechanical" lookalike, but it seems to get disarmed when you disarm the lasers. So I've been running here and there stumbling over the key/whatever I need to continue and ran around some more to find the door/whatever I should use what I found on. (and gathered some health'n'stuff too) I wasn't bored, didn't hate it but.and this is where the beginning of this review comes back; I don't know what to think/feel about it.I guess I look at it a bit like I look at Minesweeper, there are a whole slew of better games but sometimes you just need a timewaster and it can fill that role.
